Business called me to Dieppe in the summer of 1846. The cashler of one of the largest banks in New York had ab- with much knowledge about the sounded with the funds of the institution, and I had followed his tracks. Late at the close of the 14th of August I reached my destination and immediately repaired to my hotel. The first note of the cock awoks me. The town clock struck 4. I resolved to take a look at the city at day-

My curiosity was excited, and before I left Dieppe I had gathered all the details of the life and crimes of the dead man. No longer than four months before there lived in the Rue des Armes a huckster named Morris, who was honestly but frugally supporting himself, his wife and child from the profits of his trade.

up on the roof." In the faubourg of Dieppe, in a rather obscure house, all alone with a servant girl, resided a widow named Beaumaurice. She was the widow of an army officer and distinguished for great firmness of character. The excitement throughout two parts, in the lower half of which the city had not been able to disturb her is placed the dry mustard, while in the composure, despite the fact that she was comparatively unprotected.

On the 30th of April, at about 10 o'clock, Mme. Beaumaurice, who had all day suffered from a painful headache, entered her boudoir. She was very tired and sat down in a large easy chair to rest her- mustard below, the two being a maigaself. Opposite her stood her dressing case, whose curtains extended down to the floor. Back of her, upon a small table, stood the lamp. The lady had begun to disrobe herself when she noticed something that made her heart stop beating. On the floor she descried the shadow of a man's hand. The hand had but three fingers.

A Bachelor Brings His Knowledge of Human Nature Into Play.

A bachelor is not usually accredited proper treatment of children; but sometimes they step in where angels -that is, the mothers of the children -fail to tread. A well-known man about town, who is pretty well on in years, and not very fond of children, stopped in to see a married sister the I was astonished, on reaching the street, other day and found her trying to out of the room to attend to some household matter or other, leaving him alone with the child. The latter eyed him dubiously for some minutes. He was a spoiled child if ever there bachelor tried to make the little one laugh, but all he got for his antics was a sour look. Finally, without warning, the child burst out crying. Here was a quandary to be sure. He should he do? Finally a thought struck him. He looked at the crying youngster and the crying youngster looked at him through his tears. He was evidently much pleased with the impression he was making.

"Cry louder," said he.

The child obeyed. "Louder yet," urged the bachelor. A yell went up that would have done credit to an Indian.

"Cry londer still," insisted the man, and the boy did his best to obey. "Louder!" fairly howled the uncle.
